Steve Bradbury aims to be ‘the last man serving’ while raising money to fight diabetes in the Queensland Corporate Games

Winter Olympics gold medallist, Steve Bradbury makes his return to organised competition next month, raising money for Diabetes Australia-Queensland.

Famous forever as ‘the last man standing’ in the final of the 1,000m speed skating event at the 2002 Salt Lake City Games, Bradbury is representing a new online sport community - www.doubledrummer.com - on the tennis court!

Bradbury is an Ambassador for Double Drummer - a new Australian web site for active people. Double Drummer is a unique online portal for those seeking golf and tennis buddies, a cricket team, running and cycling companions, sailing crews, pilates classes, fellow bushwalkers and more. It’s squarely aimed at fighting the obesity crisis while aiming to connect people who love playing sport, right around Australia.

Unlike most other online communities that try to keep visitors in front of their computer screens for as long as possible, Double Drummer connects active people then encourages them to have fun ‘out of site’. In such an important year for international sport, the social networking site has struck an alliance with the Queensland Corporate Games to be held from May 16-18. DD is ‘the default team’ for people keen to enter the Games, but with no affiliation to the many big companies taking part (e.g. Telstra, Ergon, Powerlink, Flight Centre, etc.).

If you’d like to participate in the Queensland Corporate Games, contact Double Drummer now on 02 9474 1000. Those wanting to witness Steve Bradbury’s form on the tennis court can see him play in the Open men's Doubles event at the University of Queensland, St. Lucia in Brisbane on Saturday 17th May.

"I'm competing in the QLD Corporate Games because I love the whole philosophy of the Games", says Steve Bradbury. "It fits perfectly with the three pillars that make up Double Drummer's values - (i) participation in an active and healthy lifestyle (ii) meeting people while having fun and (iii) helping a good cause."
